APPEALS Any person, firm, corporation or department board or bureau of the city aggrieved by the decision of the Area Plan Commission regarding a Planned Unit Development, other than a recommendation as to rezoning an area to a PUD District, may appeal that decision to the Carroll County Circuit Court or any of the Carroll County Superior Courts in the manner provided by statute.

b. In the event that a change in zoning is necessary to carry out the planned development, Commission approval shall constitute approval of a preliminary plat of the development and a favorable recommendation to the Board of County Commissioners for the rezoning of the Planned Development area or areas proposed for rezoning. Final plat approval, in this case, is effective upon adoption of an ordinance by the Board of County Commissioners approving the proposed rezoning.

(1) that the proposed use, structure or fill would not impede the flow of water or increase flood heights, and

(2) the proposed use of a structure would not endanger life or property. The request for a written report from the Flood Control and Water Resources Commission shall be made by the Zoning Administrator. A scale drawing identifying the location, dimensions and elevations related to USGS datum of the land for which the Improvement Location Permit is sought shall be a part of the request and shall be provided the Zoning Administrator by the applicant for such permit.

b. Finds that buildings and structures proposed to be located in the Flood Hazard Area are designed, constructed, and placed on the lot so as to create minimum obstruction to the flow of water.

d. Finds that all buildings and structures proposed to be located in the Flood Hazard Area will be securely anchored to the ground and that equipment, materials, and wastes stored outside a building will have a specific gravity substantially heavier than water or will be otherwise secured against flooding away.

The boundaries of the Flood Hazard Area are based upon the extent of flood plains as identified by soils in the Soil Survey of Carroll County, Indiana.

Section 20.1 SCENIC AREA Scenic creek or river areas are shown on zoning maps. An improvement permit for a use or structure otherwise permitted on a lot in a zoning district, but within the scenic area shall not be issued unless and until the Zoning Administrator finds:

- b. that it is an improvement invisible within the scenic area from the water's edge at normal level between May 1 and October 15, or which will not detrimentally affect the natural and scenic features of the area; and
- c. that there will be no complete removal of natural vegetation or clear-cutting of timber within the scenic area.

Section 21

the Ringelmann Chart for a period or periods aggregating six minutes in any one hour, when cleaning a fire or when building a new fire; or when breakdown of equipment occurs such as to make it evident that the emission was not reasonably preventable;

2. Where the presence of uncombined water is the only reason for failure of an emission to meet the limitation of 3.(a) (2) above, such limitation shall not apply. The burden of proof that water is the only cause of violation shall rest with the person violating this ordinance.

b. The discharge into the outdoor atmosphere of air contaminants so as to cause air pollution and create a public nuisance is contrary to the public policy of the county and the provisions of this ordinance.

No use shall discharge from any air contaminant source whatsoever, air contaminants in sufficient quantities and of such characteristics and duration as to cause injury, detriment, nuisance, or annoyance to any considerable number of persons or to the public or which endanger the comfort, repose, health, or safety or any such persons or the public or which cause or have a natural tendency to cause injury or damage to business or property. APPENDIX A

Basic recommendations for poultry and waterfowl housing

- Poultry are social animals and develop a social hierarchy or pecking order, so they should be kept in groups (Not singly)
- Poultry should have fresh, clean water at all times; water should never be frozen
- Poultry should have adequate amounts of feed that is appropriate for their age and stage of production
 - o Feed should be stored in dry containers and areas away from rodent, wild birds and animals and direct sunlight
- The coop or housing area should provide shelter be well-ventilated and dry
 - o The coop should be secure from predators
 - It is recommended to bury the fence below the ground (at least 6-12” below the ground)
 - Doors should be locked to prevent predators from getting in
- Poultry are motivated to perform dustbathing behavior and perching (roosting) behavior
 - o The housing facility should provide an area and material for poultry to dustbathe
 - o The housing facility should provide perches (roosts) that provide a minimum of 6” of perch space for white chickens and 7” per chicken for brown chickens
 - Chickens are highly motivated to roost at night, so providing enough perch space for all birds to roost simultaneously is recommended
 - Perches should be provided to poultry starting at a young age (no later than 4 weeks of age) so that they can learn to use perches and be able to navigate three-dimensional space
- Egg laying birds are motivated to lay their eggs in enclosed nest boxes and show signs of frustration if they do not have an adequate nest to lay in
 - o Nests should be dark inside
 - o Poultry prefer to lay in nests with a substrate that they can manipulate, such as wood shavings, straw, or something similar (not wire or plastic-coated wire)
 - o Nesting areas should be clean
- General space requirements
 - o Space requirements vary depending on the bird’s age and species
 - o In general, it is suggested that chickens are provided with at least 1.5 to 2 square feet per bird if birds do not have access to a range, but backyard flocks are usually provided more space than this
 - Note that recommendations vary, with some place recommending 10-16 square feet per bird
 - o Space recommendations for larger birds vary from 6-8 square feet per bird for turkeys, 5-8 square feet per bird for geese, and 3-4 square feet per bird for ducks
- Water for waterfowl
 - o If ducks and geese are provided with water sources to swim in, the water source should be changed often to prevent contamination

ARBA Recommendations for the Care of Rabbits and Cavies

This document is being created in order to provide guidance to all individuals who care for rabbits and cavies for the purpose of pets, show animals, commercial uses (i.e. food, fiber, and exhibition) and laboratory uses. This document is also meant to serve as a guide for individuals who serve in animal welfare and regulatory organizations. These recommendations provide a general guidance on the best practices in caring for rabbits and cavies. These recommendations are meant to work in conjunction with the Animal Welfare Act (AWA) giving more concrete definition to the AWA and are not meant to supersede the AWA for those who are bound to follow the AWA for regulatory compliance.

Section 1: Housing for Rabbits and Cavies

Cage Size

Rabbits and cavies need to be provided a cage of adequate size to accommodate species and breed specific behavior. Table 1-A provides minimum space requirements for one rabbit based upon the weight of the animal. Available cage space is calculated by multiplying the cage width by length and subtracting the space occupied by the feed and water dishes located on the floor of the cage. Feeders and waters fixed to the side of the cage, not coming in contact with the floor of the cage, need to be subtracted from available cage space.

Table adapted from the animal welfare Act (Title 7 Chapter 54 Sections 2131 – 2159)

Table 1-B lists the required minimum cage size according to the AWA by breeds based upon the breed’s maximum senior weight (animal at mature size) individual animals may be housed in smaller cages based upon their weight. Table 1-C describes the minimum cage requirements for nursing does as established by the AWA. Animals may be group housed provided minimum floor space per rabbit is met as required by individually weaned rabbits and the rabbits are compatible; however, group housing is not ideal.

Cage Construction and Environment

Cages are to be constructed in a manner which takes into account species and breed specific behaviors and needs, protect the animal from harm by predators, and protect the animal from injury. Any sharp edges are either to be dulled or covered with a material, such as a plastic guard, to prevent injury to the animal and owner. Cage components need to be replaced as they wear out to prevent safety hazards to the animal and its owner. Cages with either solid floors or a resting board, for those enclosures with wired bottoms, may need to be provide for those animals prone to sore hocks, particularly Belgian Hares, Flemish Giants and Rex based on the condition of the animal's foot pads. Wire bottom cages are not recommended for cavyies unless the floor is constructed in a manner that prevents the animal's leg from becoming stuck, such as ½" by ½" wire.

It is strongly recommended that those breeds marked with an asterisk in Table 1-B be housed in cages with extra floor space and height due to the breed specific behaviors in these breeds of wanting to move about more than other breeds. If larger cages are unable to be accommodated for these breeds for whatever reason, it is recommended that an exercise program be incorporated into the weekly care regiment for these animals.

Animals who demonstrate stereotypic behavior, such as pacing back and forth; moving of feed and water dishes for no apparent reason; constant chewing at water bottles; pulling at wire; or any other repetitive behavior performed out of habit, are recommended to be given environmental enrichment. Toys such as golf balls or metal balls hanging in the cage encourage activity for those animals that require extra stimulation. PVC pipe is an excellent environmental enrichment devise placed in cavy enclosures to help the animals with their natural burrowing instincts.

Cage Bedding

Typically, bedding is not used in wire bottom cages, but on some occasions, particularly on occasions of sudden extreme cold, either straw or hay may be used. Cages with solid bottoms will use wood shavings, wood chips, straw, etc. as contact bedding to help absorb urine within the enclosure. The size and type of wood shaving/ship needs to be taken into consideration in order to maintain healthy animals. Cedar chips should be avoided as it is known to cause upper respiratory issues in both cavyies and rabbits.

Cage Cleaning and Sanitation

Cages need to be kept in a clean and sanitary condition in order to promote a healthy living environment for the animals. Bedding needs to be changed as often as necessary to prevent over soiling and wetness. For animals with contact bedding (bedding in which they come into direct contact), the bedding will typically need to be changed on a weekly basis at minimum. Wire bottom floors need to be cleaned to remove any buildup of hair and fecal deposits. Trays are to be scraped, emptied, or flushed frequently to prevent buildup of waste. At no time should waste build up above the edges of the drop pan. For cages where waste drops to the ground, waste needs to be leaned as often as necessary to prevent buildup of odor and moisture.

All cages need to be washed and sanitized with an appropriate sanitizing agent on a regular basis in order to kill bacteria, mold, and viruses. Long haired breeds such as and Angora, American Fuzzy Lop and the Jersey Wooly are prone to have wool collect on the sides and bottoms of cages. Periodic power washing will help to remove excess calcium scaling on pans, cages and cage supports. Commercially made products can be purchased that will help to eliminate calcium buildup on cage equipment.

Feed and Bedding Storage

Feed and bedding are to be stored in such a manner that it does not attract vermin such as mice and rats. Ideally open feed is stored in enclosed containers. Unopened feed bags need to be stored off the ground and away from walls. Bedding needs to be stored off the ground and away from walls.

Environmental Conditions

Environmental Conditions (temperature, ventilation, and light) are important to maintaining healthy rabbits and cavyies. The ideal environmental temperature range for a rabbit is 55° to 70° F. Rabbits can adapt to temperatures outside of this range with appropriate environmental conditioning. Many rabbitries are not climate controlled so animals may be subjected to environmental extremes. For these rabbitries, animals must be acclimated to the changes in temperatures. Rabbits do not do well when temperatures exceed 85° F. Fans, misters, and frozen water bottles in cages are examples of methods to help animals cope with high temperatures. Ventilation during high temperatures is essential to help air quality; ventilation must be provided either by natural airflow and/or artificial airflow with the use of fans or air conditioners. Rabbits that are acclimated to cooler temperatures do quite well without the aid of warming agents such as heaters. Rabbits are quite hearty in cases of extreme cold, provided they have been acclimated to such temperatures. During cold weather months, animals may require more feed as more energy is used in cold temperatures. Rabbits need to be sheltered from the elements of direct sunlight, rain, snow, wind, etc. Natural outdoor lighting and light cycles are ideal environmental conditions. In cases where natural sunlight is not available artificial lights need to be provided in a cyclical fashion to mimic natural light/dark cycles.

Cavies are more sensitive to changes in environmental conditions and generally require stricter control. Ideally cavies are raised in a climate-controlled environment. In cases where this is not possible, extreme cold and drafty conditions need to be avoided in addition to extreme heat. Ambient temperatures should fall between 60° to 85° F. Cavies do not do well in extreme heat. Direct sunlight exposure with no shading needs to be avoided. If cavies are raised outdoors, where high temperatures are possible, fans, ice bottles or other cooling measures need to be utilized when temperatures rise above 85° F. If appropriately acclimated, cavies can withstand temperatures below 60° provided they are protected from drafts and given sufficient bedding. Adequate light/dark cycles need to be provided such as 12 hours light and 12 hours dark, where natural light cycles are not available.

Section 2: Nutrition and Water

Proper nutrition is very important to raising healthy rabbits and cavies. It is recommended that the primary source of nutrition comes from a commercially produced pelleted food. Consideration as to the breed, age, ideal weight, purpose of animal being raised (pet, show, breeding, meat, fiber, etc.) needs to be considered when choosing the pelleted feed. The milling date is located on the feed bag and feed should not be used if the feed is greater than six months old. Cavies require vitamin C to prevent scurvy. If adequate amounts are not provided in the feed, it needs to be supplemented in the water or by other means. Supplements such as hay, oats, sunflower seeds, etc. may be given in addition to the pelleted feed. Treats, such as fruits and vegetables, may be given in small amounts as well. Treats and supplements should not be relied upon as a complete diet.

Feed is given in measured amounts to individual animals. The amount given per animal is based upon the breed, age, purpose, and desired weight of the animal. Measured amounts should be consumed in a timely fashion so the entire ration is used up within a few hours. It is recommended that animals be fed one ration once a day. It is not recommended that animals be fed free choice or have food in front of them at all times with the notable exceptions of nursing mothers or young, growing litters.

Clean potable water is essential to raising healthy animals and is to be freely given. Water should be checked daily or more frequently if conditions warrant (i.e. hot weather or extreme cold). If a watering system is utilized, water nozzles should be checked daily to ensure animals are receiving appropriate water flow.

Feeders and water receptacles (including water systems) need to be periodically cleaned with an appropriate cleaning agent to reduce bacteria, mold, and algae buildup. Feed and water equipment also need to be inspected on a regular basis to make sure that they are free from any condition which would prevent the receptacles from being effective for holding feed and water or are a hazard to the animal or its owner.

Section 3: Breeding and Caring for Young

Rabbits reach sexual maturity between four to six months of age; however, it is not necessarily recommended that they enter into a breeding program at this point. Rather it is recommended that animals enter into a breeding program based upon their relative size of a given breed. The ages are as follows: small breeds between 4 to 6 months, medium breeds between 6 to 8 months and large/giant breeds between 10 to 12 months of age.

Breeding needs to occur in a neutral environment or by taking the doe to the buck's cage. The gestation of a rabbit is typically 28-32 days. Nest boxes need to be offered to a doe minimally at day 28. The nest box needs to be large enough to allow the doe to enter and turn around. Minimum cage sizes for does with litters are addressed in Tables 1-C. Once a doe has kindled she may be rebred as early as when the kits are two weeks old. If this intense system is used, kits are to be weaned at four weeks of age. Careful monitoring of the doe's condition needs to be monitored for the health and wellbeing of the animal. While this intense breeding is acceptable, a less intensive breeding program is ideal. It is recommended that litters be weaned between 6 and 8 weeks of age for optimum growth. Animals need to be weaned before 10 weeks of age to prevent fighting. While it is recommended that litters be weaned into individual cages for optimum growth, litters may be group housed provided that the minimum cage space requirements per animal as described in Table 1-A and Table 1-B are met. It is recommended that does and bucks be housed in separate cages when group housing animals to prevent accidental breeding. The maximum number of litters that a doe may produce a year is eight litters. This heavy breeding program is recommended primarily for commercial operations. The maximum amount of litters that the average breeding doe will produce in a year is five litters. Should a doe miss a breeding cycle or lose a litter she can be rebred immediately.

Cavies are able to be bred at a very young age of 2 ½ weeks; however, this is not recommended. Instead, it is recommended that boars enter a breeding program at five to six months old and sows at four months of age. It is recommended that if a sow is to be bred, her first breeding occurs before 7 months of age to prevent her pelvis from fusing making pregnancy dangerous for a sow. Cavies may be harem raised where one boar services up to four sows at once provided minimum space requirements are met as described in Table 1-D. Care needs to be taken to prevent breeding of young before the recommended age.

Section 4: Standard Operating Procedures

It is strongly encouraged that breeders document their specific care practice that they use for their animals in a set of Standard operating Procedures (SOPs). These SOPs will provide any regulatory official a documented explanation and description as to the care, husbandry and breeding practices utilized for the animals on the premises. Information documented includes how much food is given, how often cages are leaned, how cages are cleaned, for often sanitation and the method of sanitation used, etc. Documentation of SOPs will also help keep owners accountable to their own minimum care standards.
